Broiler chickens (strain Cobb 500) were fed diets containing either gelatin from different sources or a mixture of gelatin and wheat gluten. There were three treatment groups and each had six replicates with five birds in each replicate. The groups were fed the standard diet or diets containing either 1.5, 4 or 6 g gelatin (plus 0.25 g wheat gluten) per kg feed. The birds were slaughtered on day 21, blood was collected and serum samples analysed for enzyme activities. When the jejunum was removed for histological examination, the birds were observed for any clinical signs. Mortality was not affected by feeding gelatins. The effect of diets on serum enzymatic activities was not significant. The serum creatinine phosphokinase (CPK) activity decreased (P
